I drew a picture at the our field trip. I think that the picture is about some people fighting with each other and some men saw that so he brought some food for them and make them a little happier and you can see some man bringing some burning hot food and his face expression is a little worried in the picture. I like this picture because I don't know why a man brought some burning hot food so I chose this picture. I'm a little interested about some men so I drew only him. I think today is my best weekday ever.

Catching a seal by Abbu

At our trip I drew a picture. As you can see the man is waiting patiently for the seal to pop its head out of the opening. The man is being very still so it won't startle the seal. The man has a tool in his hand that's called a spear! It is used for hunting animals like seals. I think the sharp point on top is the part that goes into the seal. Around the seal are fishes. There is snow everywhere with a small mountain right above the seal but on the ground. An igloo is at the top left corner with a fireplace in front and some tools beside the fireplace. At our trip I had lots of fun learning about the Inuit arts and life

Agnes art gallery by Presley

Today, April 6th, 2017 my class went to the Agnes etherington art gallery. We had to bus there because if we walked we would get soaked. When we got there we walked into the gallery. We saw all these different drawings of Aboriginal peoples, the drawings were also made by Aboriginal people. Later on the instructors Chelsea and Katharin told us to pick a detail in a drawing and try to draw it. I drew a polar bear attacking. After everyone was done drawing we went up to the studio. Then Chelsea and Katharin gave us paper and a pencil to draw are detail again but bigger and with other things in it.

So I made my polar bear attacking an igloo. Then we got to have a snack and leave on the bus ride back. It was fun!

Bear on an outrage by W.Akira McLaren

On March 6th we went to Agnes Etherington Art Gallery. At the Agnes Etherington Art Gallery we got to draw inuit life from 1950-1964. I drew a bear on an outrage fighting inuit people and a dog. The reason they were fighting back is because the bear had destroyed part of the Igloo and grabbed them and the dog and threw them up in the air.

My drawing I made at the art gallery was of a man climbing a rope up to a mountain. The original picture as called Climbing a Mountain to Collect Eggs. Mine was similar but not quite the same. In the bottom left corner there is a dog carrying a big piece of meat. I saw that in a different picture so I added it. The dog is on the sled. The man climbing the rope is trying to get eggs from the birds (I think so anyway because of the title). There is a dog sticking his head out of the igloo. I liked the original picture, so that is why I chose to base my picture off of trinity art gallery

Today our class went on a trip to Agnes Etherington art gallery. When we got there we had a little talk. After the talk we looked at the pictures we got to sketch a piece of detail. What I sketched was caribou. It was very challenging to sketch it the hardest part was the legs. And then after we were done sketching we went into the studio and we added more detail to it. I put footprints in the pic and I drew some antlers that fell off and then I put some tepees in it .in one tepee there is a person trying to sleep and in two there is a fire. And there is a chair and a fishing hook. After we were done drawing we had a snack then we got back on the bus and left.....it was a good trip.the end

Today we went on a field trip and there were aboriginal paintings there and we were shown paintings and they said ( the people who were giving us a tour) " find a painting and sketch it I was looking around and Abdul said " check out this cool polar bear painting I found" and I liked the painting and I sketched part of it. I sketched the polar bear trying to kill this guy. And the guy has a gun and he is on the ground and the polar bear is about to jump the guy and they are in the arctic and when I was drawing the painting I messed up the polar bears leg so I drew it in black to cover the messed up spot and I messed up the person's arm so I covered the spot In black again.

My picture is a man from the north that is snowy. He can not grow food. It is too snowy to grow food but if you can see my picture there is a man sitting on log. It is night. He has an igloo and a fire. He was cooking meat in the pot. It was too snowy to plant food.

Nunavut By Ethan

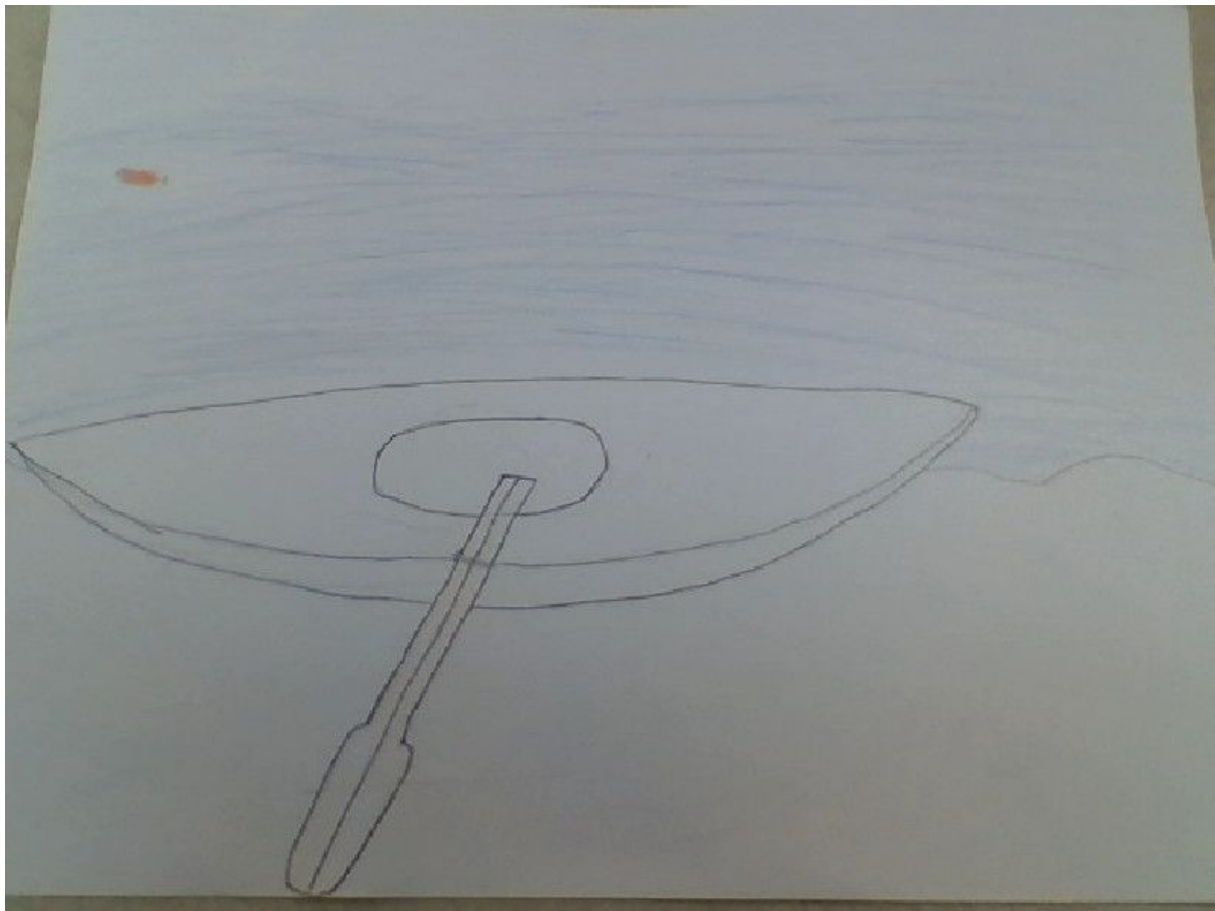

The pic above is my drawing.

My picture is a nunavut family living normally. The father hit the bear with the bow and arrow, the son is fishing and the mom is sitting around the fire. There is an igloo in the background that is where they live, also I got this picture idea from a real nunavut person that drew something like this. In the picture that the nunavut person did there were other people in the picture, also in the picture there was a man building an igloo. The people that live like this are called Inuit they speak Inuktitut.

Agnes Etherington Field Trip

By Olivia

My class went on a field trip to the Agnes Etherington art gallery to look at an exhibit about Inuit life. There were drawings made by Inuit people that show scenes from their everyday lives. We each chose a detail from one of the drawings and drew it on a piece of paper. I drew a paddle. Then we went up to the studio. We drew our detail on a bigger piece of paper along with other things. For my picture, I drew a kayak with the paddle that I drew before.

BY ADDISON.R !!

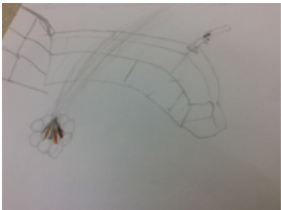

My picture is a man cooking meat over fire and him doing a ritual with his dog and drum. He's near mountains and water and he's waiting for his wife and son to feast. I learned that dogs were used for hunting and protection. And that they only ate meat. And i also learned that they ice fish in streams for food. And they collect ice blocks for igloo's and so on.

This is the traditional home of the Inuit called an igloo I drew at the Angus art gallery. That's in Queens University. I drew all of these.

This was on the side of the igloo so when they made fires the wind wouldn't blow it out.

This is a picture I drew of an Inuit man hunting a seal.

These are two dogs pulling a sled with meat on it.

By Abdul

My picture is about a bear walking to a village and a man trying to shoot him with a bow and arrow but failed because the bear snapped the arrow with his mega reflexes and is now going to kill the human because he angered the bear DON'T ANGER A BEAR!

The guy is dreaming of him catching all three and having a party, there is a fire going behind him and, the thing in front of the fire is an arrow case with arrows in it. The colourful creature is the "the random creatures" and the guy with the arrow is Mr. single, enjoy the beautiful elegant expensive ($4.00) artificial (human made), cool (but not cool) Maybe (furious) funny drawing! Hi Today we went to a trip to Agnes Etherington Art Gallery and I will tell you what I drew today. First I draw igloo. That was there house. Then I drew a woman she was wearing a coat. Their coat was made from animals. They make their carpets out of animal fur. Their food was fish, and seals and those were their food.

Haadi's story: Hunting for life

My story is about a man hunting seals that he needs for his own tribe, to survive which is one of the main sources, and another fact is they had used whale fat, warmth for lamps. The guy in the picture is representing the hunting importance for everyone in the clan. When the person waited for the seals to rise from the north, or the frozen water which is open and clear, so when the hunter got a chance to spear the animal he would kill it by throwing the spear into the animal's side or the head. Then the dogs would retrieve the seal from the water. Then they would skin the animal for the blubber fat and meat. After that they would do a ceremony for the animal's spirit because they respect all the animals they sacrifice, the animal would be given thanks for all the "stuff" they need.
